FAMILY SERVICES

A first episode of psychosis in someone we care about can have a tremendous impact on family members and other support persons. It is common for family members to struggle to adjust to changed circumstances, new demands, and to have questions about what is happening and how to best support their loved one. Family services at STEP can help.

Why family services are helpful?

Family support and education is an important part of early psychosis care and is recommended for all families. Engaging in family support and education can have a variety of benefits including fewer symptoms and hospitalizations, improvements in overall functioning, more effective family communication, and decreased caregiver burden.

What does STEP offer for families?

STEP offers a variety of supportive and educational opportunities for family, based on an individual family's needs, interest, and the young person's preference. Such opportunities include:

- Education about psychosis, treatment, recovery, and other important topics
- Communication, problem-solving, and crisis management skills
- Connection to local and virtual resources

Family Guidelines for Supporting a Young Person with Psychosis

Families can play an important role in supporting recovery, reducing stress, and helping to prevent the onset or worsening of symptoms.

CONSIDER:

- Psychotic illnesses are influenced by both biological and environmental factors
- Reducing stress within family relationships, schedules, and daily interactions can make it easier for someone to manage day-to-day life
- Family support can also buffer against outside stressors.
- People experiencing psychosis may be particularly sensitive to the following:
 - o Warmth, structure, support, space: help them recover at their own pace
 - o Criticism: negative comments and interactions can lead to increased symptoms
 - o Over-involvement: intrusiveness or doing too much can overwhelm people
 - Complex, unclear communication: is hard to process and can worsen symptoms

GUIDELINES:

- Take one step at a time. Go slow. Progress may be gradual. Recovery takes time.
- Lower expectations for the short term. Compare this month to the last month rather than last year. Increase expectations only after a period of improvement or stability.
- Use symptoms as a guide. If they worsen, slow down, simplify, reach out, and ask for more professional help. If they improve, continue forward gradually.
- Know and watch for early warning signs. If you notice subtle changes in behavior or increases in symptoms, slow down or take a break. Ask for help early, when a little may go a long way.
- Keep it cool. Enthusiasm is normal. Disagreement is normal. Just tone it down.
- Give each other space. It's okay to offer. It's okay to refuse.
- Observe your limits. It's okay to say "no." A few good rules keep things clear and safe.
- Ignore what you can't change. Pick your battles. Let some things slide.
- Don't tolerate violence or threatening. Contact your clinician or emergency services immediately if you notice any behaviors suggesting risk for suicide or violence.
- Keep it simple. Keep sentences short and to the point. Stay calm and positive
- Keep or re-establish family routines. Stay connected to friends and family.
- Solve problems step by step. Work on one thing at a time. Consider alternatives.
- Support the reduction of cannabis (and other drug use). They make symptoms worse, can cause relapse, and prevent recovery.
- Consider therapy for yourself. if you experience changes in mood, sleep, capacity to cope
- Stay Hopeful. You are not alone. Recovery is possible. Treatment can help.

CONNECT: Educate yourself and connect with family support networks, such as:

Common Stages of Adjustment for Family Members

Common Stages of Adjustment for Family Members.

It is distressing to learn that someone close to you is experiencing psychosis. You may experience a variety of emotions, including shock, confusion, bewilderment, and guilt. There is no right or wrong way to feel, and you should not feel disloyal or uncaring for any of the thoughts or feelings you are having. It is common for families and friends to go through the following stages:

- As you realize something serious is happening to your loved one, you may feel worried or frightened.
- As the problem worsens, you may realize you can't manage it yourself and seek help.
- You'll probably have lots of questions, all of which are normal:
 - What caused this? How do you treat it? What can I do to help?
 What should we tell people? Should we have sought help sooner? Could it happen again?
- As the person begins to recover, you will be relieved. You may understand the illness more and start to feel hopeful about the future.
- Meeting your loved one's needs for independence and care is a balancing act. As they start to reintegrate back into daily life, you may find yourself nervously watching for signs of relapse, and you may be try to shield your loved one from anything that might cause a relapse
- With a return to normalcy, you may speak with your loved one about psychosis, how it affected everyone involved, and how to help each other in the future

Families, partners and friends need time to understand and accept what has happened. Don't keep things bottled up. Talking with family members, friends, or professionals is very helpful.

*Be sure to ask your STEP providers about upcoming family support offerings or call/text Dr. Sykes, family clinician, directly at (203) 654-9646

Tips for Communicating with Someone Experiencing Psychosis

When a person experiences an acute psychotic episode, it can be frightening, confusing, and distressing to both the individual and his or her family and friends. Here are some things you can do to make their experience easier.

1. If they are having difficulty concentrating:

- Keep your statements short
- Give one message at a time
- Don't give too many choices at once

2. If they are expressing delusions and are 100% convinced:

- Don't argue, don't say "You're crazy," or "That's not happening"
- Accept this is their reality. Be true to yourself. You might say, "I can't see them but I know you can."

3. If they are expressing delusions AND have previously been open to discussing them:

- You might gently remind them, "These thoughts come up sometimes" or "You've learned not to give those thoughts too much attention."
- They might check out their interpretations with someone they trust. You can ask respectfully, "How might that be/happen?"

4. If the person's behavior is frightening you:

- Give the person space. Move gently to quieter, more open surroundings. Don't crowd or rush the person.
- Try to speak and act calmly. Ask what might help.
- Try to stay calm and communicate simply and clearly.
- If there are warning signs of a relapse, reassure them that you are seeking help for them.

If you feel you need support from first responders due to an acute safety issue, please make sure to do the following:

- When calling 911, it is helpful to say to the operator that your call is regarding a mental health crisis and you require assistance. If your family member/friend has a diagnosis, let the 911 operator know what it is. Advocating for your family member/friend's treatment and care can help ensure that their illness is taken into account by the police and other first responders during their interactions with them.
- If appropriate, request a mobile crisis team to come to your home instead of police. When speaking with the 911 operator and/or police, provide as much information about your family member/friend's mental illness, prior contact with the law, and any concerns you have about the situation.
- Be prepared to repeat this information once police or other first responders arrive.
- If you must vacate the premises to call the police, stay close enough so you can identify yourself and speak with officers when they arrive.
