NEEDS ASSESSMENT

In the era of opioid crisis and its relation with the continuous rise of health care costs, non-operative, non-opioid techniques for pain reduction are of outmost importance and can actually serve as attractive alternatives to drug and surgical therapies. Proper patient education, meticulous pre-procedure planning, use of optimal techniques for imaging guidance and post-procedure care are integral to successful pain palliation technique. Interventional Radiologist could build relations with referring doctors, hospital administrators and local media proposing a non-opioid procedure that can serve as an attractive alternative for pain management.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

At the conclusion of this activity, participants will be able to:

1. To review the most common indications for pain management in IR
2. To review the most common IR pain management techniques
3. To compare outcomes based on different clinical scenarios and technical approaches
