“Public Health Responses to COVID-19: Examples of the Value of Academic-Public Health Partnerships”

The COVID-19 pandemic has required unprecedented public health approaches to controlling spread. Academic and public health partnerships can play an essential and unique role in contributing to these critical efforts. This presentation will discuss three examples of how such partnerships with Yale have been successfully launched at the local, state, and national levels. Topics include contact tracing, surveillance in long-term care facilities, and several projects being conducted by Connecticut Emerging Infections Program.
