“Dual epidemics: Managing TB in a high HIV burden setting”

South Africa has been devastated by the dual epidemics of TB and HIV. Managing both these diseases raises many issues in clinical practice and programmatic management and there is a continuous struggle between ensuring good specialised care for each disease but also ensuring streamlined services for patients. I will highlight interventions that have been tried, those that have been successful and where these have failed, and conclude by highlighting where advances can still be made.
