Scott E. Sherman, MD, MPH, is an Associate Professor of Population Health, Medicine and Psychiatry at New York University School of Medicine and Co-Chief of the Section of Tobacco, Alcohol and Drug Use.

Dr. Sherman's research focuses on how to redesign health care systems to better help people quit smoking. He is particularly focused on examining the effectiveness of interventions in routine practice, as well as how to disseminate and implement them.

The Addiction Speaker Series features leading experts in the addiction and substance abuse field. Each month, a new expert is invited to speak about a particular subject.
