"A Different Perspective": Supporting the Sexual and Reproductive Health of African American Youth and Young Adults

Biography: Olivia N. Kachingwe, PhD, MPH is a MCH postdoctoral research fellow in the department of Population, Family and Reproductive Health at Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health. Dr. Kachingwe's research focuses on understanding how health care providers, peers, family members, and technology can better support the sexual and reproductive health needs of African American youth and young adults, with a particular emphasis on health disparities rooted in systemic racism and discrimination against LGBTQ communities. Her most recent work uses qualitative methods to explore African American parent-child sexual health communication.

Tuesday, January 11, 2022 · 12:00-1:30 PM
Zoom
1st Year Students (mandatory)
2nd Year Students (optional)