“A Genomic Approach to Understanding Kidney Allograft Loss”

There is no corporate support for this activity

This course will fulfill the licensure requirement set forth by the State of Connecticut

ACCREDITATION:

The Yale School of Medicine is accredited by the Accreditation Council for Continuing Medical Education to provide continuing medical education for physicians.

TARGET AUDIENCE:

Attending physicians, house staff, fellows, medical students, PA's

NEEDS ASSESSMENT:

Kidney transplantation is the best treatment option for patients with end-stage kidney disease, but long-term allograft survival is limited by progressive renal fibrosis. Clinicians need to know about the pathways for fibrosis in chronic allograft injury, and the implications for novel therapies to target renal fibrosis in general.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES:

1. Learn about the clinical and pathological contributions to decreased long-term kidney allograft survival
2. Learn about the role of fibrosis in chronic allograft injury and the overlap with chronic kidney disease
3. Learn the novel approaches to targeting renal fibrosis.

DESIGNATION STATEMENT

The Yale School of Medicine designates this live activity for 1 AMA PRA Category 1 Credit(s)[™]. Physicians should only claim the credit commensurate with the extent of their participation in the activity.
