NEEDS ASSESSMENT

This topic will be enriching to all those who devote their lives to the emotional, intellectual, and physical well-being of children. Media has a profound and lasting effect on all of us, and no one more than a child. Social norms and sense of self are established by first encounters with the world outside through experience and through media. Books are a uniquely powerful and beneficial tool that can provide children the succor and stimulation they need to grow and thrive.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

At the conclusion of this activity, participants will be able to:

1. Explore why books are still the most effective, challenging and nurturing form of media in a child's development
2. Explain the creative and technical process behind making a book for a child
3. Demonstrate the elements of an illustration that narrate or explain subtle and complex ideas without words

DESIGNATION STATEMENT

The Yale School of Medicine designates this live activity for 1 AMA PRA Category 1 Credit(s)TM. Physicians should only claim the credit commensurate with the extent of their participation in the activity.
