TIARA C. WILLIE

POSTDOCTORAL FELLOW AT WARREN ALPERT MEDICAL SCHOOL OF BROWN UNIVERSITY / MIRIAM HOSPITAL

"Addressing the Sociopolitical Context of Intimate Partner Violence and Women's Health in the United States: If Not Now, When?"

Biography: Dr. Tiara Willie is a NIDA-funded postdoctoral fellow at the Warren Alpert Medical School of Brown University. As a social epidemiologist, her research examines how social and behavioral factors influence the etiology and health consequences of gender-based violence, both domestically and globally. Guided by the social-ecological model, her research explores individual-, relationship-, community-, and societal-level determinants of gender-based violence and the health implications of gender-based violence in order to develop interventions to reduce violence and improve mental, sexual, and reproductive health.

Dr. Willie received her PhD in Epidemiology and Public Health from Yale School of Public Health in 2018
