

CONNECTICUT PARTNERSHIP

For Public Health Workforce Development

An alliance that provides guidance on workforce development and continuing education activities in Connecticut

Who We Are

The Connecticut Partnership for Public Health Workforce Development (CT Partnership) was founded in 2000 to bring together stakeholders to provide input on statewide workforce development and continuing education activities and serve as an advisory body to the New England Public Health Training Center in Connecticut.

Members

- Undergraduate and graduate programs in public health
- Connecticut Department of Public Health
- Local health departments and districts
- Public health professional and trade associations
- Non-profit training organizations

Collaborative Projects Informed by the CT Partnership

- Connecticut Healthy Homes webinar series (2010 - 2020)
- Emergency preparedness and communication trainings (2002-2009)
- Creation of Essential Measures: Opioid and Substance Use Disorder Online Toolkit (2019)
- Delivery of the nationally recognized course, Evidence Based Public Health (2019 - present)
- Online training series for public health nurses (2022-23)

About Us

The Office of Public Health Practice (OPHP) at the Yale School of Public Health serves as the convener for the CT Partnership. The Partnership meets 2-4 times per year in a round table format to encourage free and open discussion. Topic areas for discussion include training needs and future programs, strengthening public health disciplines supporting experiential learning for public health students, and discussing new grant opportunities and areas of potential collaboration between partners. With the recent investments by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in state workforce development, the CT Partnership is positioned to play a supportive role by facilitating awareness, obtaining input and fostering collaborations between the many partners working on exciting new initiatives.