“The Non-Academic Pivot: My journey from postdoc to industry scientist”

Sam Dundon conducted 10 years of research in fundamental cell biology in academic institutions before making the leap to industry. She is now the head of the Cell Sciences facility at the Branford, CT site of Abcam, a world-renowned antibody supplier. Join us as she shares her experience with the non-academic job search, how the academic skill set can translate to research in a different sector, and how industry can afford unique opportunities to make STEM more equitable.
