Probing the Role of the Microbiome in Antiphospholipid Syndrome

Martin Kriegel, MD, PhD
Assistant Professor of Immunobiology
Assistant Professor of Medicine (Rheumatology)

Wednesday • January 16, 2013 • 8:00 to 9:00 a.m.
300 Cedar Street, 2nd Floor Conference Room
Room N203 TAC Building

ACCREDITATION

The Yale School of Medicine is accredited by the Accreditation Council for Continuing Medical Education to provide continuing medical education for physicians.

NEEDS ASSESSMENT

Recent studies indicate the importance of gut microbiota in regulating the immune system. Thus, it would be important to understand how gut microbiota controls the immune system and potentially affects the development of disease such as antiphospholipid syndrome.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

At the conclusion of this activity, participants will be able to:

1. Understand the interactions between gut microbiota and the immune system
2. Describe the pathogenesis of antiphospholipid syndrome
3. Explain molecular mimicry and give examples
4. Get an overview of how to analyse the gut microbiome

DESIGNATION STATEMENT

The Yale School of Medicine designates this educational activity for 1 AMA PRA Category 1 Credit(s)[™]. Physicians should only claim credit commensurate with the extent of their participation in the activity.

FACULTY DISCLOSURES
