Thejal Srikumar, MD, is an Assistant Professor of Medicine (Medical Oncology) and cares for patients as part of the Center for Gastrointestinal Cancers at Smilow Cancer Hospital and Yale Cancer Center in New Haven as well as the Smilow Cancer Genetics and Prevention Program. Dr. Srikumar received her medical degree from the University of South Florida Morsani College of Medicine, and completed her residency at Yale School of Medicine where she served as Chief Resident. She then went on to complete her fellowship in Hematology/

Oncology at Yale, during which she obtained an Executive Master of Public Health degree in Epidemiology and Health Informatics tracks and was a Chief Fellow.

Dr. Srikumar's clinical and research efforts center on caring for young adults with gastrointestinal malignancies. She also has an interest in patients found to be at high risk for developing gastrointestinal cancers due to certain genetic mutations. Dr. Srikumar is passionate about medical education, and serves as an Assistant Program Director of the Yale Medical Oncology-Hematology Fellowship Program.
