Recent progress in our understanding of the development of autoimmunity suggests the opportunity of intervening in the prodromal phase of clinically apparent disease, such as arthritis or other disease manifestations. This one-day international symposium will bring thought leaders together to review the conceptual basis and available clinical data for implementing preventive strategies in rheumatoid arthritis, systemic lupus erythematosus, and other autoimmune and rheumatic conditions. In this symposium, you will:

- Illustrate their knowledge on treatment options
- Discuss pre-auto-immunity and the prevention of rheumatic disease
- Identify at-risk individuals
- Illustrate their knowledge on treatment options
- Employ approaches to future progress

Learning Objectives

- Discuss pre-auto-immunity and the prevention of rheumatic disease
- Use innovations and advancements in the field of rheumatoid disease
- Identify at-risk individuals
- Illustrate their knowledge on treatment options
- Employ approaches to future progress
